Steven Tripp is a political commentator who has been internationally published, most notably in The Spectator.

When Peter Costello left the Treasurer's Office in 2007, Australia was an economic standout. After inheriting a $96 billion net debt "black hole" from Labor in 1996, the Howard-

Costello Government delivered ten surpluses from twelve budgets through relentless fiscal discipline. Line-by-line expenditure reviews forced ministers to justify every dollar as if it were their own, which

Costello recently recalled as an "enormous effort". Net Commonwealth debt was eliminated by 2006, saving billions in interest. Productivity surged, inflation remained low, and Australia was the world's economic model. Two decades later, the contrast is damning. Federal gross debt has surged past $1 trillion, with net debt now around 35-43% of GDP. Continued on page 2.
